

The tragic growth of deforestation, over-harvesting, water pollution and genetically modified foods over recent years is not only causing global ecological damage to our planet but also having a life-altering effect on people's daily livelihoods who rely on their natural surroundings. This eco-justice tour is based in the jungle of Ecuador and provides young people with hands on experience of the issues and opportunities for improvement that our generation faces as we move toward a more sustainable way to make use of our planet.

On this jam-packed tour young people will learn about the current difficulties facing the global ecology, how farming could move to a more organic approach and what legal policies and procedures can be put in place to protect the environment.

All the valuable lessons they will learn will be taught through hands on experiences. They will hike through jungle areas, be involved in the planting of organic food, create organic fertilizers, make and enjoy organic chocolate, appreciate the river on a full-day white water rafting adventure and much more.

Furthermore they will have a chance to engage with the local jungle communities, participate in their cultural activities and pass on the lessons they have learnt to local school children in order to encourage a more eco-friendly future.

The tour takes place in a comfortable and well-equipped jungle lodge specifically designed to cater for school groups. Here you will enjoy seeing a wide variety of jungle birds, shy and elusive animals, tropical flowers, leaf-cutter ants, dazzling butterflies and other inhabitants of the mystical Amazon rainforest.

Run by licensed and experienced guides and staff this tour is highly educational, fun, adventurous and safe. It will not only grow young people's knowledge and understanding of eco-justice issues and how they can be addressed but also grow their love for the environment and desire to make a positive difference in the future
